

How much does a root canal cost?

The work of a root canal can make the crown of the tooth more fragile. A permanent restoration is needed to seal off the root canal and return the tooth to its full function. This is usually done by your general dentist, not the root canal specialist. In most cases, a crown is needed, which ranges from an average of $1000-$2000.

Are root canals a good idea?

The American Association of Endodontists states that most root canals come with an over 90% success rate. There is always a possibility that other factors might fail the tooth like cavities, trauma, infections, and fractures that aren't related to a root canal treatment.

How long does a root canal take?

A root canal is a way to treat a tooth that is badly damaged or even infected. Root canals are usually performed by an Endodontist, a dental specialist. The average appointment time for root canals can be around 30-90 minutes. After the root canal, you will need a follow-up appointment to receive a permanent tooth filling or crown.
